REPRESENTING

- I. The ENGLISH WORDS and PHRASES before the Latin; among which latter, no Word or Expression is admitted, but what is Classic, and of an approv'd Authority.
 - II. The LATIN-CLASSIC before the English; wherein Care is taken, that the Proper and Original Signification of each Word is first set down, which is followed by those that are Derivative, Metaphorical or Remote.
 - III. The LATIN-PROPER NAMES of those Persons, People or Countries that frequently Occur, or are any way Remarkable in Classic Authors, with Explications from their several Languages, and a short Account of them Historical and Geographical.
 - IV. The LATIN-BARBAROUS, Explaining as well such Technical Words or Terms of Art, as are made necessary to us by the many Inventions and Discoveries not known to the Ancients, as those which crept into the Latin Tongue during the Ignorance and Darkeness of the Middle Ages.
 - V. The LAW-LATIN, Comprehending those Words, which are made use of by the Common Lawyers in their particular Profession; very necessary for the understanding of Charters, &c.
- The WHOLE Completed and Improved from the several Works of Stephens, Cooper, Gouldman, Holyoke, Dr. LITTLETON, a Large Manuscript, in three Volumes, of Mr. John Milton, &c. In the Use of all which, for greater Exactness, Recourse has always been had to the Authors themselves.

TO THE READER.

TIS not the design of the Prefacers to spend their own pains or the Readers time, in enlarging upon the Necessity and Usefulness of a Work of this nature, as well to Learners, as the Learned. That's a Subject which has been sufficiently spoken to by Our Reverend and Learn'd Predecessours in such Labours as these, in the Prefaces before their several great and useful Performances; to which the Reader may have recourse for satisfaction in this matter, if he still wants it. Nor do we account it a fair thing, but on the contrary both vain and ill-natur'd, how common soever the practice of the World may have made it, to attempt the raising and establishment of our own Reputation, by debasing or shaking that of Others, who before us have bestow'd their Time and Labours upon this Subject. Our sentiment is, that all men ought to rise at the mention of Their Names and Memories, in order to their paying them that just Veneration they have deserv'd for Their laborious Industry; by which though many have been, dayly are, and for the future may and will be improv'd in their knowledge; yet none can be thoroughly sensible of those Mens great Travail, but such as have either accompany'd or followed them in the same Road.

But though we own all imaginable deference to be due to Enterprizers in this kind, yet withal we could not but think both this sort of Learning to be capable of many farther Improvements, and our selves likewise not wholly incapable of contributing to such a performance. Few humane Works can be accounted perfect and complete, and fewer of this large and comprehensive nature, where the Reader is to expect a Collection of the whole Body of two Copious Languages, the English and Roman. To the former of which Tongues, because of those changes made in it, and additions to it, by our disuse of many Words in vogue with our Great Grandfathers, and by our naturalizing so fast, as we do, several Phrases and Terms of Art, Imported from Italy, Spain, and most especially France; that Character seems very suitable, which Horace has given of the Latter,

*Multa renascuntur, quæ jam cecidere: cadentque
Quæ nunc sunt in honore vocabula, si volet usus;
Quem penes arbitrium est, & jus, & norma loquendi.*

If then our own Language does in this manner both vary and improve, Collectors of Words and Phrases ought doubtless to keep pace with these Variations and Improvements, by noting and publishing as well its decays in some instances, as its advancement in others. And as to the Latine Tongue, when 'tis consider'd, that the Purity and Idiom of that Language is to be pickt up out of many ancient Authors, whose Expressions must be diligently compar'd, before they can be thoroughly understood; that most of these Authors have been both restor'd in many places from the auctority of Manuscripts of the best Note, and the obscurer passages in them illustrated and interpreted by Learned Men; and lastly, that very much of this great Work has been done, even since many of our Dictionaries were compiled: it can't, we think, be well deny'd, that as there was great need of such improvements, so the helps for that performance were not few, provided a suitable diligence and skill were apply'd in bringing them together. 'Tis this we pretend to in the following Work, and in this Preface to it, design to give an account both of our Assistances; and the Method we have used in their application, by speaking distinctly to its several parts, in the same order they lie before the Reader.

In the English-Latine part of this Work, we must acknowledge our selves to have been very much assisted by the extraordinary Pains of the Reverend and Learn'd Dr. Littleton; whose unwearied industry in compiling that part of his Work, when compar'd with the Travails of others who had troden the same path before him, will certainly appear as far superior to them all, as he has exceeded them in exactness of Method and Skill. Some Authors, in their Prefaces, are usually too large, very often partial, and sometimes even immodest in the accounts they give of their own achievements. Nothing of all which can be charg'd on the Doctor, to whom we are bound to do this right, by declaring to the World, that we find him to have done more in that Alphabet, than he has mention'd as done in His Preface. And we may be said to have a competency of judging in this case, when the Reader is assur'd, that we have not only read, but weigh'd and consider'd every Line and Word in that whole Collection. But as we own our selves beholding to him for his assistance, so we doubt not but, on comparing both performances, the Reader will find very many Enlargements and Improvements in this we now put into his hands, throughout all its distinct members and parts. For we have inserted several whole Classes of Words, which had been either omitted before, or were very lately introduc'd into our Language. We have been more exact, more distinct and full, in noting the various significations of Verbs as well as Nouns, both those that are Simple and stand alone, and them that occur in our English manner of Composition; which in Nouns is very usual, by our tacking two of them together, as in Corn-lost, Hunts-man, &c. and in Verbs, by adding some of our Particles, such as are on, off, &c. to the ends of them. We have pickt up very many Terms of Art, us'd in Trade, in Law, in Sea-affairs, in Physic, Building, Heraldry, &c. which were never taken notice of before in a Work of this nature. We have been very careful in gathering up the Idioms and Proprieties of our Language, and in noting the Particles; which in our Tongue are very numerous, and in the understanding and application whereof consists the Difficulty as well as Expressiveness and Elegance, not only of the English, but of all other Languages also that we have any knowledge in. And it has been no small part of our care and pains throughout this whole English-Latine Dictionary, not only to put our Additions and Insertions into proper Latine Words and Phrases, but to make numerous alterations also in those of both sorts which we found Collected, by clothing them in a neater, that is, a more ancient Roman garb. Besides our own private Collections, as well from Books we perus'd, as by Enquiry of, and converse with persons well skill'd in the Terms of their several Arts, Sciences, and Trades; the Authors we have been chiefly assisted by were these, Sir Henry Spelman's Glossary, Somner's Saxon Dictionary, Dr. Cowell's Interpreter, Terms of the Law, The Seaman's Dictionary, Skinner, the Right Reverend Dr. Lloyd, now Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, his Philosophic Dictionary, Mr. Walker's Book of Particles, &c. which Works being generally alphabetical, were consulted and compar'd with as much ease, as with diligence excerpt. Our Method could not be other than that of Alphabet, the receiv'd one of all Works of this kind, both for its agreeableness, and for the ease and speed of the Enquirer. Lastly, that our Reader might know Terms of Navigation, Law, &c. we have continued

Dr. Littleton's distinction of them by a Cross, thus +; as likewise those words derived from the Latine, by an Asterisk, in this manner, *.

The Latin-Classic part of this Work is next to be spok~~en~~^o, wherein as the defects were more numerous than in the English-Latine, and the usefulness of it greater, especially to Learners, whose advantage was chiefly aim'd at in this undertaking; so more Labour and Skill was requir'd to supply the one, and render the other more complete. We design to acquaint the Reader in few words, whence we had our Materials for making the Improvement in this part of the Work we pretend to, and in what Method we have dispos'd them for his use and advantage. We began our Collection by a careful perusal of several Authors, as Lucretius, Terence, Cesar, Phaedrus, Gratius, Petronius, &c. some of whom, we observ'd, had scarce been nam'd, or (if sometimes quoted) often to very little, and sometimes to very bad purposes, in Dictionaries of this Volume. For in reading over these Authors, we met with several Words, with many Significations of words, and with more Constructions of them, whereof no Latine-English Dictionary before this had made any mention. Secondly, Robert Stephens's Latine Thesaurus, the Second Edition of it, (a Work which all the Learned will own to be the completest of this kind that is extant) and Thingius his Additions to him lay always before us, whom we constantly consulted with all that application and skill we were Masters of. Thirdly, we had by us, and made use of, a Manuscript Collection in three Large Folio's digested into an Alphabetical order, which the Learned Mr. John Milton had made, out of Tully, Livy, Cesar, Salust, Quintus Curtius, Justin, Plautus, Terence, Lucretius, Virgil, Horace, Ovid, Manilius, Celsus, Columella, Varro, Cato, Palladius; in short out of all the best and purest Roman Authors. In using the Assistances mention'd, we did not take every, nay scarce any word, any signification, or Construction of a word, upon trust; but the way we took to make these Great Mens Labours useful to us, was this: They seldom omit naming not only the Author, but the place in him, whence they fetcht their Authorities. This is known to be Stephens's method, and the same may be seen in Mr. Milton's Manuscript, by the Curious or doubtful. Having therefore receiv'd this general direction from them, wherewith we soon became well acquainted by often turning the Books they quote; we had recourse to the very passages in the Authors; in doing whereof, how much pains soever it might cost us, we are sure we have satisfy'd our selves, and have, we hope, done right to our Reader and them. Lastly, the Complete Indices generally annex to the Dauphine Editions of most of the Roman Writers, (some of which we had by us, and others we had free and constant recourse to)

to) were also very useful and serviceable to us. We would not be suppos'd to commend all the attempts made in those Dauphine Editions; though we judg some of them to be Great Performances, amongst which number Pliny's Natural History (that Store-house of the Roman Tongue) put forth by Harduinus, deserves the first place. But our meaning is, their complete Indices were of great use to us. For all the places being mention'd and directed to in every Author, wherein any word occurs; by looking out and considering those places, (though that was a Work of vast pains and labour) we became able not only very much to improve our own Attempt, but in many instances to correct and polish those of our Predecessors. And whoever shall vouchsafe to go on with this great Undertaking, (for we won't pretend to have gone through all its parts completely, some of the Hands employed about it having had a stop put to them by death, and others diverted by Employments of a different Nature;) will find the Course we have thus far proceeded in, to be most useful and certain to the Reader, how laborious soever it may be in it self.

Having told the Reader whence we fetched our Materials, we come now to shew him in what order we have distributed them, for his readier use, and better satisfaction.

All Primitive Words, such as Novus, Nox, &c. being the Heads of their several Clans or Families, are Printed in Capitals, by such a Mark of Honour to distinguish them from their Descendents. The Quantities of all Syllables that could be supposed doubtful, are carefully marked by this Note [[^]] to shew their shortness, and by this [-] their length. The Quality or kind, whether Noun, Verb, &c. is scarce any where omitted. The Hebrew and Greek Terms, wherever they could be found answering the Latin are inserted. Words manifestly of a Greek Extract are shewn by a Star, *. But we have turned out all those Words purely Greek, that others before us had put into this Alphabet, which we could not find naturalized by any Latine Author, and dress in a Roman Garb; it being our business to compile a Latin Dictionary, not a Greek Lexicon. And such Words as are either Obsolete, not being to be met with in any Latin Author; or tho occurring in Classic Authors, were yet judged unfit for School-Use, are noted with an Obelisk, †. Most of these little Distinctions we found made use of before; and judging them of use to Learners, thought fit to continue them, without offence (we hope) to the Learned. But that which follows, is of a Concern more material and considerable. It may be reduced to these three Heads. The Etymon, Signification, and Use or Construction of each Word, whereto the whole Nature of Speech is reducible. We shall speak distinctly of all these, that the Reader may have a clearer Notion of what he is to expect from this Performance.

To be well acquainted with the true Etymology of Words is certainly a very necessary Piece of Knowledge, because it not only conduces much to our understanding their Meaning, but imprints the Sense of them in our Minds and Memories. For which Reasons we have never been wanting in our Accounts of this Sort, tho we are not so profuse and lavish in them as others that have gone before us, who seem to cloy the Reader with all those ridiculous and decried Derivations, invented and furnished by Varro, Isidore, Perottus, &c. which Authors make it their Business to fetch all Latin Words almost from some Roman Original; whereas it appears past doubt to any considering Man, that the Romans were beholding in some measure to the Hebrew, but in a far greater to the Greek Tongue, for the Copiousness of their own Language. Instead therefore of repeating four or five strained and far fetched Etymons, (for so many are to be seen under some Words) we have set down one or two only, which we judged most agreeable to the measures of Analogy, generally adding the Authors Names shortened whence we had them, as Varr. for Varro, Voss. for Vossius, and Lit. for D. Lisleton.

In giving the Significations of Words, we have not thrown them all together in a heap, which was the usual way before us; but have put them into distinct Apartments or Sections, always giving that Sense of the Word the first place, which we found deserved it; the rest having their Subsistence and Dependence from that, and therefore for decency and good manners sake ought to follow it. And wherever the English Word is manifestly beholding to the Latin one for its Derivation, that is Printed in Black Letters, to render it more visible, and consequently to imprint it deeper on the memory. Nor is the English given for the Latin so numerous as before, whereby the Readers Memory was surfeited rather than satisfied, and the true Notion of the Word often confounded. But we have mentioned those Significations only, and no more, which we found warranted by the Authors we consulted; some of whose Names abbreviated we always add, but not always their very words; which we have inserted in such Cases as these only, when the Word or Sense of it was wholly new, that is, never taken notice in a Work of this Nature before, of which sort several hundred Instances occur; and when our Author's Expression contained some Phrase or Idiom of Speech, some Definition, Etymology or some thing that was either Critical or Grammatical. And in giving Authorities or Examples, we usually confine our selves to three, and those the shortest; unless the thing treated of be new, or has some time been controverted; or unless the very Example brought out of the Author has heretofore been wrested by others.

Government or Construction of Words is as essential to the Writing any Language, as the Significations of them are to the understanding it. This Regiment appears more visible in Verbs, than in any other Parts of Speech; for which Reason we have been larger in our Accounts of them; wherein we have so managed the Matter, as at the same time to shew both the Grammatical Government of the Word treated of, and likewise the Latin Propriety or Phrase. To prove what we say to be true, we will instance in the Verb Oro, under the third Signification of this Word, which is, to beg, entreat or desire, we first shew its Use with several Moods, as a Subjunctive, an Imperative, and an Infinitive; then, how 'tis used with different Cases, as with an Ablative, with an Accusative as well of the Person as of the Thing, with a Dative, with an Ablative and a Preposition, and lastly, with a double Accusative: all which Constructions we prove by the Authorities of the best Authors, as Plautus, Terence, Tully, Virgil, &c. The same is our Method in all other Verbs, and Words whatever, whose Construction is various; only this we would have our Readers observe, that where the same Regiments occur under different Significations of the same Word, we have given Examples under the first Signification only; contenting our selves barely to name those Constructions under the following Senses of that Word, and to add the Authors Names without inserting their Words.

To make the more room for these useful Materials, that this Work might not too much exceed the Volume it was extant in before, which it does not by above fifteen Sheets; we were forced to take great pains in removing that Rubbish, which some others, with no less Labour perhaps, had brought together; designing their Collections, as we think, for a common Laystall of Barbarism, rather than for a Latin-Classic Dictionary. Besides therefore the fore-mentioned numerous and nauseous Etymologies, we turn'd out all Words and Phrases, whose Authors were either not to be found, or, when found, appear'd in so barbarous and uncouth a Dress, as made them very unfit Company for Tully, Cæsar, Virgil, Horace, and the other Romans of the first Quality; to whom they would likewise have been both unintelligible and uneasy, as being the Corrupters and Debauchers of that noble Language, which the others had refin'd, and taken so much pains to transmit to them in its Purity and Lustre. Of this sort are those Terms coin'd by the School-men, Canonists, Modern Philosophers, &c. to which we have assign'd a particular place, namely, the Latin-Barbarous Class, where he that has a mind to foul his Fingers, may find them.

This Separation we saw to be not only possible, but necessary, especially for Boys, whom we have found by experience, in their turning other Dictionaries, wherein this Distinction is not observ'd, often to leave the Gold, and take the Dross, that is, neglect the pure Latin Words, and even pick out for use the Barbarous. Another Course we took for gaining room was this, in Passives, Participles, and Degrees of Comparison, we have refer'd the Reader to their Actives, Verbs, Nouns, Participles, and Adverbs; unless the Goodness of the Author, or Singularity of the Example perswaded to the contrary. We also struck out, as always useless, and often impertinent, all Latin Explications of Words made by late Writers; and either remov'd or shorten'd the English Repetitions of those Latin Explications which had been taken out of the Ancients; as likewise all Repetitions occasion'd by the different Spelling or Writing the same Word, all Phrases put in improper places, all Interpretations of Phrases judg'd unnecessary, and lastly, all Proper Names not Metonymically us'd. And whereas there are several Words which come from proper Names, we left them to be treated of under their Originals, with this Reference [Vid. Propr.] made thither from the Appellatives; by which means we thought, one would cast a Light upon the other, the Plant would be remembered for its Products sake, and the Product would be the rather acknowledg'd, because it was found at home.

Poetry is known to have a Set of Words peculiar to her Court, which we have distinguish'd by a Flower [✱] placed before them. We judg'd such a Distinction very beneficial to Youth, who are apt to use one instead of the other, as Flumen for Fluvius, Musa for Carmen, Fons for Puteus, Unda for Aqua, Lumen for Oculus, &c. besides that such a Difference shews the Excellency of Poetry, and displays its Finery and Court-like Garniture, when compar'd with the plain, tho comely, Dress of downright Prose.

The Observation of Synonyma's, or Terms of a like Sense, and of Antitheta's, or those of a contrary Meaning, is doubtless of great use in finding out the true value and force of Words; and therefore we have carefully noted them also with peculiar Marks, the former thus = and the latter in this manner X.

Having said so much of the foregoing parts of this Work, tho not more than we have really done in them; to make the Reader amends, we will be shorter in our Accounts of the following.

The things we chiefly design'd in the Latin-Proper Dictionary, were Geography, History, and the Fictions of the Poets. Our main Care in the Geographical Part has been, to give the New or Modern Modern Names of Countries, Cities, &c. under those which had been put on them by the Ancients, especially the Romans: a Catalogue of which latter the Reader has in English Latin also, in an Alphabet by themselves, subjoin'd to the English-Latin Dictionary. We have not been so large in our Historical Accounts, as we had Precedents for, from Stephanus, and those who follow him in that Collection; but generally speaking have confin'd our selves to that Compass set us by Latin-Classic Authors; tho' where-ever the Matter was either very considerable, or the Instance afforded any useful or pleasing Knowledge, we took the Liberty of exceeding those Bounds. The more eminent Names, both of Places and Persons, be they Hebrew, Greek, or Latine, have the preeminence given them of Capital Letters. That wherein our Care has been more particular in this part of the Work, is, The Poetick Fictions; whereto we were induced, partly, because they are of so great use for understanding many Passages in the eminentest Greek and Latin Poets, and partly in regard such Stories as those are in some Schools made use of as Exercises to be put into Latin by the Scholars.

The Reader has had a Hint already of what he may expect in the Latin-Barbarous Part, and therefore we shall only add here, that tho' we have not rak'd together all that Stuff, which old musty Glossaries would have furnish'd us with, (a Course which must have made our Volume too Bulky, and consequently less useful to those 'tis chiefly design'd) yet we have not been wanting in our Industry for an Improvement here also. If a larger Heap of this Rubbish be desired, Du Fresnoe is as easie to be had, as his Loads of it are large. The Terms of Chymists, those especially of the Paracelsian Way, are not so much as mentioned here; which no considering Man will call an Omission, because they are wholly foreign to the Latin Tongue. And besides, to speak the plain Truth out all at once, as we pretend not to understand this Cant, so neither (we believe) do the Coiners of it themselves, by whom we suppose it to have been invented for Amusement, rather than Use.

Next to the Latin Barbarous Alphabet, follows one of our old Common-Law Words in Latin-English also. This Part of the Work has received very great Improvements from a Learned Gentleman of the Long Robe; and its usefulness is own'd by the whole Body of that Honorable Profession, and must be also acknowledg'd by all other Men of Letters, who do not think Spelman, Cowel, &c. Triflers in their Laborious Performances.

Lastly, the whole Work is clos'd with a Brief and Methodical Account of the Weights, Coins, and Measures in use amongst the Romans; together with their Abbreviations in their Writings, Inscriptions, and Monuments.

Perhaps the Reader will think this short Account we have given of our Performances, wearisome and tedious. If its Perusal appears so to him, the Writing it must needs have been really so to us. And much more the great Pains we have taken throughout all the Parts of this useful Work; so we will call it, how forward soever some may be in censuring the Authors, or others backward in putting a due Value on what they have done. Of which Labours they only can have a true Sense, who have been actually concerned in them. That Description of these Pains, is as ingenious as 'tis true, compris'd by Joseph Scaliger in the Epigram he wrote, after he had made an Index to Gruter's Inscriptions; which in kindness we will give the Reader into his bargain, and so take leave.
